<td>April</td>
<td>Review and rewrote the Higher National Diploma in Business Studies Human Resource Management and Human Resource Development modules.</td>
<td>The programme had been offered in the same format for the previous four years. Academic research and understandings of HRM and HRD had changed, as had 'best practice', and these development needed to be reflected in the material being studied by the students. Essentially the exercise honed my strategic project management skills and again emphasised the importance of regular liaison with key stakeholders, the value of scheduled planning meetings and the development and agreement of a detailed action proposal with clear time lines indicated. The importance of regular review was also highlighted. As an academic and professional lecturer I am constantly involved in the strategic review of educational courses. On each occasion I am involved in reviewing, redesigning, moderating or developing a new programme of study I become more experienced and proficient. All the expertise I am able to continue to develop in this area will always be of continuing value.</td>

<td>June</td>
<td>Writing and marking of examination scripts.</td>
<td>As part of my role as a senior lecturer I have responsibility for the preparation and marking of final year examination scripts in a BA degree programme and for the year two CIPD students. This experience was both traumatic and rewarding. The absolute precision with which the questions need to be written cannot be overemphasised. I learnt how to read the same question from many different angles and then rewrite it to ensure there was no ambiguity. I learnt to actively seek the objectives assessment of my colleagues and how an untainted pair of eyes can be very valuable!!</td>

<td>September</td>
<td>Became a mentor for a new member of staff.</td>
<td>To increase my awareness, skills and understanding of being a mentor. The importance of communication and developing a relationship was open and trusting. Just phoning to say 'Hi, everything OK?' was really important in letting the new member know you were available should they want to talk about any issue no matter how big or small. I enjoyed the experience and it demonstrates how crucial making time to support your staff is. I have an idea for using the same principles with new students.</td>

<td>December</td>
<td>Attended a conference on supporting students via distance learning.</td>
<td>I recognise the increasing importance of making learning accessible in ways which are not traditional or necessarily conventional. Taking education into the community and distance learning is a strategy supportive of the government’s ‘Widening Participation’ agenda. Increasing my awareness of this strategic aim is therefore vital use of computers. The government’s strategy to widen participation involves making education accessible to those who are currently under-represented. By attending the conference I was able to learn how to achieve this goal by using the computer more effectively. I am currently using the knowledge and skills I gained to plan and write distance learning material. I intend to develop an interactive web page which can be accessed by students twenty-four hours a day and through which they can download material and enter into dialogue with myself and other students.</td>
